Here in the collections department, we strive to keep ourselves updated on the latest and best methods of caring for the family heirlooms with which our donors entrust us. So many of these objects have been lovingly cared for by generations of the same family and we aim to keep them safe for generations to come.

As part of my professional development, I have been taking a course in the care and identification of furniture. For the practical part of the course I have been studying a recent addition to our collections – the Reed family bureau washstand. A bureau washstand is part chest of drawers and part washstand, generally with a towel rack or mirror at the back. Reed family lore has it that the bureau washstand was first owned and used on a farmstead close to Springdale by Sarah Reed Meek, who came to Springdale with her first husband (John David Reed) in 1851 and died in 1878. Their eldest son, Lewis Jarvis Reed, likely inherited the piece from Sarah, as he was one of two executors of her will. Lewis Jarvis Reed died in 1912, leaving the bureau washstand with his wife, Elizabeth Keicher Reed. After Elizabeth passed away in 1948, the piece eventually passed to Lewis Jarvis and Elizabeth’s daughter, Ollie Reed Beaver. Upon Ollie’s passing in 1978, the washstand was inherited by her nephew, Vinson Reed, who donated it to the Shiloh Museum in 2013.

Identifying the Wood
The primary wood used in this bureau washstand is most probably black walnut; the secondary wood inside the carcass (main body) and on drawer backs looks like...
Have you been reading our online museum blog? It’s really good stuff, folks! Susan Young, outreach coordinator—who takes care of all things web-related—has been writing, and encouraging staff members to write, blog entries. I’m impressed not only with the broad and fascinating subjects covered but also with the caliber of writing. For those of you who haven’t yet found your way to our blog, here are a few of the highlights you’re missing:

Photo archivist Marie Demeroukas writes about the “back-to-the-landers” who moved to rural Northwest Arkansas and how they survived in “Back to the Land,” including the story of Cindy Arsaga and her Madison County adventures in the early 1970s.

If you’ve ever wondered where all the stories are about the women who made this a great country, Susan introduces us to three unsung local heroes in “Three Ozark Women”: Emaline Winn, born into slavery; Dr. Phoebe Struble Lininger, who practiced medicine in the first decade of the 20th century; and Iginia Pianalto Cigainero, one of Tontitown’s original settlers.

Library assistant April Griffith has two articles that mix research and field work. “Ozark Mountain Folk Fair: History in Our Back Yard” introduces us to a 1973 folk festival just north of Eureka Springs, today part of the land she and her husband own, that attracted as many as 150,000 people, including performers John Lee Hooker, the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, and Earl Scruggs! In “Bat House Cave,” April describes the Newton County cave, captured in museum photographs of the early 1900s, that we thought was used for moonshining but was instead a government-bonded distillery.

Take a look at exhibit manager Curtis Morris’ piece (“Snapper Save”) on the rescue of a snapping turtle by groundskeeper Marty Powers. The photos alone are worth a look.

In “Politics As Usual,” collections manager Carolyn Reno lets us in on some correspondence in the museum’s collections between Springdale businessman Luther Johnson and Senator J. William Fulbright. Fulbright’s writing gave Carolyn some interesting insights into his character.

Photographer Don House’s recent post, “Perfect Beauty,” relates his musings upon a particular ash-leaf maple tree—or box elder—on the museum campus and a surprise sighting there one day.

So if you need a pick-me-up, like short stories that inspire, or just want a light touch o’ the Ozarks, the Shiloh Museum blog might be just what the doctor ordered.

pine. According to Field Guide to American Victorian Furniture by Thomas H. Ormsbee, black walnut was used extensively during the period for this kind of piece, as was pine for the insides. Both woods are native to Northwest Arkansas and were plentiful in this area during the 1800s, but we cannot identify the woods with certainty without the use of invasive techniques.

Identifying Methods of Manufacture and Hardware
Most of the components of the bureau washstand are machine made. The drawers are joined by dovetail joints, cut by hand, and hand-cut nails. The drawer runners, which have been replaced, are glued on. The carcass is probably joined together with dowelling. Drawer locks have been replaced, which necessitated the drawer pulls to be replaced and secured with factory-made screws. On the top drawers, the previous pulls’ screw holes have been pegged in and filed down.

Style
The plain bracket feet, inset key surrounds, and skirt with S-curved scrolls date the piece from the 1840s ("transitional early Victorian"). Comparing this piece to photographs of similar pieces of furniture, we also find elements from the 1860s and 1890s. The style most similar to this bureau washstand is “country,” defined as practical, filling a basic need, and mostly handmade. That also defines much of the home furnishings in the historically poor Arkansas Ozarks.

Age
If furniture style is not readily evident, another way to date furniture is by looking at the patina (surface aging and wear). The patina on the bureau washstand is not as dark as on a black walnut chest of drawers we know to be from the 1860s. However, inspection under ultraviolet light shows orange fluorescence of the coating, indicating that shellac was applied within the last 75 to 100 years. Given the restoration of this piece, dating by the patina is difficult.

The next approach to dating furniture is to look at the manufacture and hardware. As stated before, the bureau washstand parts and drawers were machine cut, but both the dovetail joints and nails were hand-cut. From the 1850s, most factories used machines to cut wood; small factories or shops used machines to cut the basic shapes they needed, but continued to do the rest of the work by hand. Machine-made nails were available from the mid-1870s. Using this dating technique, an educated guess dates this bureau washstand to the early 1870s or very late 1860s, probably made in a small factory by a cabinetmaker who had much experience in working in different styles. The 1870 census lists 30 cabinetmakers in Washington County and 441 in Arkansas.

A Mystery
Bureau washstands generally have towel rails or mirrors built into them. The top of this piece has neither but it does have two square-cut holes on each side, near the front. At the back, on top, a piece of wood has been added; there is also an added backboard. Could this be a repurposed bureau washstand? One theory collections manager Carolyn Reno and I have is that, after the family installed plumbing, they repurposed the bureau washstand as a chest of drawers, cutting out the towel rail, flipping around the top, and adding an extra piece to make it look pretty. The baseboard may also have been added then or maybe later. Repurposing furniture is a time-honored tradition.

Restoration
The baseboard on the bureau washstand is a different color, and perhaps made of different wood, than the rest of the piece. It also looks out of place and is definitely machine made. The drawer pulls are a style popular in the 1870s to 1890s, but they are a later addition and are also a different color. Inspection of the varnish on the handles and baseboards under ultraviolet light showed no fluorescence, which indicates the presence of a synthetic varnish. Such varnishes were used heavily in furniture manufacture and restoration from the 1950s until recently. Additionally, the replacement locks do not have a patent number, which means the patent had probably expired before the locks were manufactured.

Another clue as to the age of these additions is a 1950s-pattern canvas pocket tacked onto the back of the top left drawer. The recent coating of shellac on the bureau top and carcass also points to a restoration date in the 1950s, the shellac being within a seventy-five-year age mark.

Why was this piece restored in the 1950s? Elizabeth Keicher Reed died in 1948. It is probable that Ollie or another family member wanted to keep using the bureau washstand as bedroom furniture and wished to restore the piece for future family members to enjoy. Whoever restored the piece wanted it to be as close to the original as possible. This can be seen in the shellac coating and the treatment of the baseboard. The back of the bureau washstand shows signs of singeing consistent with the story of the family's house catching fire sometime in the 1920s or 1930s, and the reverse of the backboard has been painted black to match.

Thank you, family Reed, for making my work so interesting.

Decoration Day and dinner on the ground at Pine Grove Cemetery (Madison County), circa 1940. Identified in the photo are Addie Brandenburg Hoskins (with her back to the camera), and Addie’s daughters, Tommie (next to Addie, also with her back to the camera), and Geneva (at the gate). All three are wearing dresses made from feed sacks, using patterns Addie cut from pieces of newspaper. Tommie Mooney Collection

Over 200 antique and contemporary quilts were entered in the 36th Ozark Quilt Fair held at the museum recently. Visitors to the fair voted on their choices of the best antique and contemporary quilts.

The winner in the contemporary category was a Cathedral Windows quilt by Reba Clark of Siloam Springs. Diane Pennington of Lowell won second with her Tie Sunburst quilt. Third place was awarded to an Out of the Blue quilt by Joan Miller of Alma.

In the antique category, a Whig Rose quilt owned by Ronna Precure of Huntsville won first place. Second place went to a Zimmerman patch quilt owned by Rose O’Connor of Springdale. Ruth Vacin of Fayetteville won third place with a Nebraska crazy quilt.

Special thanks to Arvest Bank for sponsoring the 36th Ozark Quilt Fair!
Welcome, Judy!

We’re delighted to introduce our new education manager, Judy Costello. Judy grew up learning and living Southern history through her family’s exploration of Civil War battlefields, swimming holes, potential duck-hunting sites, and old cemeteries where ancestors were buried. Her education includes degrees in agricultural engineering from Auburn University and LSU. She moved to Fayetteville 27 years ago with her husband who is a professor at the UA. She invested many years homeschooling her three children, all of whom are now UA students.

Judy's interests include outdoor activities, working with children, and learning new things. Judy and her three children are very active in the Washington County Historical Society’s living history programs, including Heritage School, a week-long class for young people that teaches the heritage and culture of Civil War-era Arkansans.

A Little Help from Our Friends: Meredith Eades

As part of her internship at the museum, University of Arkansas student Meredith Eades worked under the direction of exhibits manager Curtis Morris and collections manager Carolyn Reno to revamp our World War I exhibit. Here’s Meredith with the finished product.

Working at Shiloh Museum has opened my eyes to the different and complex jobs that exist in a museum setting. I have learned many things since I joined the team here. The majority of work I did was in the collections department, where I learned how to catalogue new artifacts, how different materials need to be cleaned and stored, and what the process of researching and designing a new exhibit is like. I also learned what it is like to work in an environment that is directly suited to my interests and employs many great and helpful people intent on helping me learn about museum work.

My experience at Shiloh Museum has been a great one and I am very grateful for the opportunity to intern here this past summer.

Support the Shiloh Museum When You Shop Online

The Shiloh Museum is partnered with ShopforMuseums.com, a national museum fundraising program where you can shop in hundreds of your favorite online stores and, at no extra cost to you, have a percentage of your purchase amount donated to the Shiloh Museum. Many of your favorites are there, including National Geographic, Cabela’s, Lands End, Dell, eBay, Amazon, and Eddie Bauer.

It's easy to do: Register or log in at ShopforMuseums.com. Click on Shiloh Museum, choose a store, and shop!

Note: ShopforMuseums.com respects your privacy. They won't collect credit card information or share your personal information with a third party.
What’s New in Store?

Crammed space, inadequate security, poor lighting, unwelcoming… these are all terms we used for our former front desk and museum store space. Soon we’ll unveil the major remodeling project we’ve been working on since mid-August.

Thanks to architect Tim Turek (pb2 architecture + engineering) and Nabholz Construction Services, we’re about to debut a brand new reception desk and store. It’s a bright and cheery look, complete with new merchandise and soon to come, a new way to make your purchases. We’ll be offering a few specials in time for the holidays, so come see us!
